BIOGRAPHICAL NOTE:

Leo McCarey was born in Los Angeles on October 3, 1896, and attended Los Angeles High School, where he met his future wife, Stella Martin. Following his father's wishes, he studied law at the University of Southern California, but was the first to admit he was a failure at the legal profession. During his first year at USC, he fell five floors in an elevator and broke his legs. While convalescing, he practiced six hours a day on the piano, an instrument he had studied as a child, and later described that period as being the first time in his life he was able to do something he loved.

After completing law school, he spent a short time working in mining, including a Utah copper mine that he had purchased stock in with the $2,000 in damages he had received from his elevator accident (the stock proved worthless).

After many unsuccessful attempts to get into the movie studios, a friend introduced him to Tod Browning, the director of the 1931 classic DRACULA, who invited him to work as his 3rd assistant director at Universal. Following Universal, he worked from 1923 – 1929 at Hal Roach Studios, eventually becoming vice-president of the firm. While at Hal Roach, he supervised hundreds of comedy shorts, and is credited with teaming Laurel and Hardy, making four films with them. McCarey went on to become a highly successful director, writer, and producer, making pictures at Fox, Paramount, and United Artists, and is among a very small group of directors who have won Oscars for Best Picture, Best Director, and Best Screenplay.

A devout Catholic, many of his films have religious storylines and feature priests or nuns as the main characters, showing Catholicism as a positive force for change in people's lives. A project that McCarey was very enthusiastic about was a film about Adam and Eve, which he attempted to get made in 1954, but despite having a script and cast in place, it was ultimately rejected by the Production Code Administration due to concerns about nudity.

McCarey and his wife had one child, Virginia Mary McCarey, who went on to become a television writer for Screen Director's Playhouse. McCarey passed away at the age of 72 in 1969 from emphysema.

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE:

The Leo McCarey Papers span 1934-1971, covering the bulk of his work as a Hollywood director and screenwriter, to slightly after his death in 1969. The collection is composed of both personal and business papers, including correspondence, film scripts, music and lyrics, photographs, plays, press clippings, and various financial documents relating to investments and real estate. The materials reflect his deep religious beliefs and anti-communism sentiments, as well as revealing the Hollywood establishment's view on censorship, among other topics. Some of his most popular films are represented, such as AN AFFAIR TO REMEMBER, THE BELLS OF ST. MARY'S, and GOING MY WAY, and subjects include individuals such as Ingrid Bergman, Bing Crosby, Irene Dunne, Cary Grant, Helen Hayes, and Howard Hughes.

The collection is arranged into four main series with multiple subseries as listed below. Series 1 pertains to film and television (both realized and unrealized works), followed by Series 2, Personal Papers, which include correspondence, financials, honors, press clippings, and other miscellaneous materials, followed by Series 3, Business Papers, which also contain correspondence and financials regarding Leo McCarey Productions, guild documents, and story materials submitted for his review. The final series relates to theatrical plays that Leo McCarey either invested in or produced.

Series 1, Film and Television, is arranged alphabetically by title of the project, then chronologically by year when applicable, with undated works relating to the title at the end. Correspondence is organized chronologically, with earliest date first; however, in the Business series, financial expenses related to Leo McCarey Productions are not in chronological order.

Please note that under guilds in Series 3, Screen Directors Guild of America (SDGA) materials will be found in Directors Guild of America (DGA) folders; SDGA was the predecessor of the DGA, however the archives uses the current DGA designation.

When material is given description that is not evident from contents, it is to be inferred that the processor acquired that knowledge from original folders/envelopes. Oversize materials that were found throughout the collection were relocated to Box 48 at the end of the collection.
